Offering peace of mind to the customer, McMullanODonnell have always been committed to investing in state-of-the-art production machinery while there success as a company is, in part, dependant on responsible environmental stewardship, including their approaches to natural resources, waste management and recycling, energy efficiency, air and water emissions and indoor air quality.

McMullanODonnell's employees are committed to ensuring that all company operations proactively comply with applicable environmental laws and regulations for the implicit purpose of protecting human health and the environment. They are encouraged to identify opportunities for integrating environmentally favourable solutions in operations, in order to maximise the long term benefits of the products that the company manufactures.

McMullanODonnell specialise in using the most modern PVCu material which provides important advantages both economically and ecologically.

PVCu has an extremely long lifespan as it is particularly weatherproof and age resistant. In this context, PVCu provides decisive advantages beginning with environmentally friendly production through to the most advanced manufacturing methods and energy saving processes helping to reduce the consumption of energy and water. There are no costs for repainting since the surface is maintenance free.

Environmentally friendly processes are integral to McMullanODonnell's company philosophy - from production through to recycling. For it is particularly complex industrial production methods that create the need but also the great opportunity to minimise damage to the environment.

"It's probably a case of so far, so good," Commercial Estimator Michael McMullan outlined when asked to assess the current state-of-play for the company in today's market place. "The company is growing and our continued expansion is down to our two main objectives which are quality and service."

"We're currently working on a few new build schools and nursing homes in the Republic of Ireland with stringent programmes, along with other commercial projects across the North. We like to cater for all types of projects - large and small, which we find offers a good balance across the spectrum."

"The company has an aluminium commercial division and PVCu domestic division and all our products are made in house. We also specialise in bespoke solutions for PVC
